

Life as a Community

Pictured here are, left to right, Ami, Nong Si, and Naa Si. This was the evening of the 25th in Chiang Mai.

We had a very nice evening together. It was the first time to meet Naa Si. Ami brought her to the party. Ami is part of our community in Borsang.

At the end of the evening Ami and Naa Si were among the last to leave. Ami had told Naa Si she needed to meet us, and needed to join our evening because we were a caring and praying community.

Naa Si has ovarian cancer. She is undergoing Chemo and is facing this battle essentially alone. She has no spouse, no children and her Mom and Dad have passed. Ami has taken on the responsibility to look after her, to help her, and to encourage her.

Before their departure we heard Naa Si's story, shared our stories and spent time in prayer with her.

So young. So hard. I still struggle so much with things like this.

Please pray for Naa Si and that our community in Borsang might be an encouragement to her.
