

Dear Benjamin,

Brady, who turns 31 in August, may have ceded his coveted parking spot, awarded to those with the top attendance in the offseason program, but his passion for football is anything but vacant. That was apparent as he spoke yesterday following the Patriots' first official practice of training camp. For all the publicity he gets, Brady is a private man, but it didn't take much reading between the lines to realize that after winning his first Most Valuable Player award last season, the offseason award he was trying to win this time was More Visible Parent. Brady became a father last August. Less time around Gillette equaled more time with his toddler son in California, and more time with girlfriend Gisele Bundchen.

Buenas Noches, Amigos!
